CROWDER AGRICULTURE STUDENTS COMPETE IN TEXAS

NEOSHO, MO - Crowder College Agriculture students participated in the 2013 North American Colleges and Teachers of Agriculture (NACTA) Judging Conference, April 3-5. The event was held at Texas Tech University's College of Agricultural Sciences and natural Resources facility. Community College students from 15 schools across the country participated in the competition.

Crowder placed in several areas, but had one overall high individual in Jared Sage (Neosho, MO), who was a member of the Livestock Management team. The team placed 4th in the competition. Other teams placing were: Dairy Judging (3rd place), Crops Judging (5th place) and the Quiz Bowl team made it to the 3rd round.

Congratulations to the students for their accomplishments at this event. Crowder College is proud of the additional time and effort it took of these students to be successful at the competition.
